

A YEAR OF Writing

A Planner for Writers

This basic planner is meant to help you keep track of books to read, goals, and projects on a quarterly basis. You'll also have a little space to set your daily word count goals and whatnot. Use this to supplement your planning and keep your motivation up as you move towards your objectives in 2024.

NOTES

A woman with long brown hair, wearing a blue and white striped long-sleeved shirt, blue jeans, and red sneakers, is sitting on the floor of a library. She is smiling and reading a book. The background is a large wooden bookshelf filled with many books. The lighting is warm and focused on the woman.

WRITING PROMPT

What's in a Name?

Make a list of possible titles and subtitles of your book. Your book title plays a crucial role in your writing and publishing journey. Be sure to come up with something that you can be proud of, that you will be happy to be remembered by.

WRITING PROMPT

Write a letter to your 8-year old self.

Tell the little, wide-eyed you the fun things you have done and the dreams you have achieved. Give them advice, share memorable stories, and offer them pieces of hope to hold on to.

WRITING PROMPT

Write a beginner's guide to a hobby

(that is not writing!)

Provide a little background about the hobby, how you got into it, and why you love it. Don't forget to include a step-by-step tutorial of the process!

WRITING PROMPT

Write a reporter's perspective of your Dream Book Launch Party

Put yourself in the shoes of a journalist whom you invited to your book launch party. How will they report the events? Will they interview you and include it in their write-up? Have fun pretending!

| WRITING PROMPT

*Write one of your stories
from the point of view of another character.*

There is more than one side to every story. For this prompt, consider a series of events that you have written in your book, but told from the perspective of another character.

| WRITING PROMPT

*Write stream of consciousness.
Let the words flow,
do not edit!*

We know, we know, it's hard not to self-edit as you write. But for this exercise, you have to try hard to just let your mind flow and your hands write, without telling yourself to rethink, erase, and edit.

NOTES

Conquering Dragons: List down writing fears and how you plan to overcome them.

Writing can be very much like going on a fantasy adventure and encountering beasts along the way. List down your biggest fears about writing and make a game plan about how you will slay them.

July

Write a story entirely in dialogue

Have the characters discussing something or having an argument. You can use characters from your book or characters from another story you like.
